Anyone up for a PyCon testing BoF? Rather than anything formal -- the spread of testing tools is too great for that ;) -- I thought it might be fun to organize a testing-specific series of lightning presentations, and/or a dinner/drinking outing, and/or a brainstorming session, and/or...

Thoughts? Enthusiasm?

Oh, and my talk (on Sat morning, I think) should be entertaining for all. I'll try to avoid the level of hyperactivity that led to "Stupidity Driven Development" two years ago, but I can't promise anything. Testing is just too much fun.

cheers,

A photograph of a theater interior. The stage is visible in the background, featuring a large set of red theater curtains that are partially open, revealing a bright yellow and orange light at the bottom. In the foreground, the dark red, curved rows of theater seats are visible, facing the stage. Two people are seated in the middle row, seen from behind. The overall atmosphere is dark and dramatic.
